

Cervical Checks

A care provider uses gloved fingers to check effacement and dilation of the cervix and how high/low the baby is positioned.

Cervical exams don't predict the start of labor, and exams during labor do not predict the length of labor. They can provide helpful information to help you and your care team discuss options for what to do next.

